Dear Colleague

It has been brought to my attention that a serious incident has occurred in England in the Down's syndrome screening programme. There has been a failure to provide analysis and a Down's syndrome screening result for a number of pregnant women in the NHS East Midlands Region. This is due to the screening request card not being fully completed.

Because of the seriousness of this incident Dr Anne Mackie, Director of Screening Programmes, UK National Screening Committee, has requested that all SHAs, PCTs and Trusts in England provide assurances to her and themselves that the problem does not exist within their screening systems.

Although there is no Down's syndrome screening programme in Northern Ireland I am aware that HSC Trusts in Northern Ireland may offer Down's syndrome screening as part of maternity care and use laboratories in England to process the samples and provide results.

Trusts should assure themselves that all Down's syndrome screening samples taken and sent to laboratories have been appropriately analysed and reported on and that women have received their results.

It is important that all Trusts have failsafe systems in place to ensure that all results on screening tests are received and reported to women in a timely manner.

Yours sincerely
